Interview Notes - Isaac

Interview 1 - Boxing and Recreational Sports

Behaviors

- Participated in Tochito (flag football), soccer, and boxing.
- Last participated about a month ago but has been busy with school.
- Plays sports at recreational centers in Juárez, usually with friends.
- Found a boxing class near where he lives.
- Does not usually recommend these locations to new friends.
- Boxing coaches organize participants into groups for different exercises, including physical conditioning, punching bags, and sparring.
- Coaches correct participants' technique and posture.
- Classes last approximately two hours, with participants rotating through activities.
- Does not formally record performance statistics.
- Pays for boxing classes.
- Two people who attended casually but eventually stopped going.
- Purchased boxing hand wraps and initially struggled to put them on correctly. His coach taught him how.

Opinions

- Does not see much benefit in step tracking or similar statistics for evaluating physical improvement.
- Recognized improvement in Tochito through better dodging and defensive performance.
- Recognized improvement in boxing through increased resistance, punching, and physical performance.
- Thinks actual physical performance is more meaningful for recognizing progress.
- Beginning physical training can be difficult while building conditioning.
- Believes online instruction could benefit some people but prefers in-person instruction for hands-on activities such as boxing.

Interview 2 - Piano and Jewelry Making

Behaviors

- Participated in piano classes, most recently about three months ago.
- Performed at an end-of-year piano concert.
- Initially struggled to finish learning a piano piece but returned to it and eventually completed it.
- Recorded a video of herself and friends playing piano and saved the recording in her phone's photo gallery.
- Sees jewelry-making progress through completed creations.
- Spends no time formally documenting or reviewing progress.
- Considered using a piano application but did not end up using it.

- Has a friend who plays piano, records practice sessions, and shares notes.
- Started playing piano after finding a spare keyboard at her grandmother's house.
- Began making earrings for her mother, who purchased materials for her.
- Learned jewelry making through experimentation rather than formal instruction.

Opinions

- Finds it difficult to determine whether her skills are improving.
- Considers how long her jewelry creations last and feedback from others to see progress.
- Believes writing things down could help because she frequently forgets information.
- Recognizes improvement in jewelry making through increased creativity.
- Enjoys being able to wear the jewelry she creates.
- Is interested in learning drawing and has considered online courses.
- Usually keeps accomplishments private because sharing creates pressure to perform better.
- May consider sharing her work with others in the future.

Interview 3 - Golf

Behaviors

- Participates in golf and enjoys leisure activities such as watching movies.
- Selects a golf course and schedules a tee time by phone or online. He can choose between nine-hole and eighteen-hole rounds.
- Practices golf at a driving range and on courses.
- Depends on memory and comparing to past sessions to see improvement.
- Sometimes records his golf swings to compare recordings and find changes in technique.
- Uses a golf-tracking application while playing on the golf course.
- The application records strokes per hole, distances, and scores.
- Does not use the same application to evaluate swing technique during practice.
- Knows other golfers who use paid applications or additional performance-tracking tools.
- Not paying for a golf-tracking subscription himself.
- Tries to practice at the driving range approximately once a week.
- Got interested in golf as a spectator before participating.
- Purchased golf clubs and began practicing at driving ranges before playing on courses.
- Shares golfing experiences and performance with friends and family who also play.
- Previously had a boxing membership but stopped attending because work interfered.
- Uses YouTube and social media as learning resources.

Opinions

- Finds it difficult to identify small improvements or necessary adjustments when comparing swing recordings.
- Is interested in taking golf lessons to improve his skills.

- Time availability has prevented him from starting golf lessons.